

Task 1

Suggest three realistic organic ways to increase traffic to www.PolBol.in.

1. Strategy 1 — “India Ne Kya Socha?” Reel Series

The concept: Select one outrageous poll finding from PolBol each Monday (e.g. “72% Indians believe X”) and create a snappy 15-second Reel/Short around it. Display the question, pause for a beat/pause dramatically reveal answer along with a reaction bait-hook. E.g. Agree? Vote ab bhi open hai → polbol. in Why this’ll fly: Poll reveals themselves are curiosity-gap based content. Those who don’t agree will share it to argue. Those who agree will share it to celebrate feeling understood. Win-win to dominate the algorithm.

How-To: Doesn’t require a studio. Black screen with bold text, white font. Use trending audio (Lo-fi Hindi music hacks/a trending Insta song) Be sure to post Tuesday–Thursday when civic participation is highest. Finally, link to PolBol in bio, and set your description to: “Tumhara vote count hua? Dekhne ke liye tap pakadha PolBol.in”

2. Concept: Polls that are irresistible to forward in WhatsApp Family/College groups.

Formula: [Subject that everyone has an opinion about] + [Two Sides that can both be equally defended]

Ex :-

“Modi vs Kejriwal — Who do you trust more on inflation?”

“Reservations should be based on income, not caste — Yes or No?”

“IPL is fixed — 61% Indians agree. Do you?”

The poll card would be in image format with (result teaser + “Vote on PolBol. in”) as watermark at the bottom. These get forwarded by people. Curiosity drives people to search for the link.

WHY IT WORKS: We get WhatsApp forwards from family groups absolutely free of cost. This gets us into demographics that Instagram can’t reach. (Age 35–60 primarily.) These are the people who actively discuss what’s happening in the nation.

HOW: Make 2-3 such forwardable poll image cards each week. Build them on Canva. Keep clean. No party logos. Just convey Data + Opinions.

3. Strategy 3 – Campus Ambassador Loop

One of the easiest and most cost-effective ways to grow PolBol organically is by leveraging college students. Instead of trying to reach everyone, focus on finding one active and opinionated student from 10–15 colleges in cities like Delhi, Kolkata, Pune, and Hyderabad. These are the students who regularly post on Instagram, participate in college communities, or are active in WhatsApp groups and Discord servers.

Their role is simple: share one PolBol poll every week within their existing communities. Since the recommendation comes from someone their peers already know and trust, it feels much more genuine than a regular advertisement.

A caption could be as simple as:

"Fill karo yaar, sirf 2 minute lagenge. Dekho tumhare city ki opinion baaki India se kitni alag hai!"

The biggest hook here is the regional comparison. People naturally become curious when they see that students in Kolkata voted differently from those in Delhi or Pune. It sparks conversations, debates, and encourages others to vote so their city's opinion is represented.

Instead of offering cash incentives, PolBol can reward ambassadors with recognition. A "Campus Voice" badge on their profile, a monthly leaderboard, or a feature on PolBol's social media can be valuable for students looking to build their personal brand or strengthen their resumes.

The execution is straightforward. Reach out to around 20–30 potential ambassadors through Instagram or LinkedIn, preferably students who already share opinions on current affairs or campus issues. Give each ambassador a unique tracking link (UTM) to measure which colleges are driving the most traffic. Continue working with the high-performing ambassadors and replace those who aren't generating engagement. This strategy requires very little investment, relies on peer-to-peer recommendations, and has the potential to create consistent organic traffic. In many cases, a single active college WhatsApp group with 500 members can generate more meaningful engagement than a paid advertisement because people trust recommendations from their own peers.

Execution: Create 2–3 forward-ready poll image cards per week. Use Canva. Keep it clean — no political party logos, just data + opinion.

Start with Strategy 2, lowest effort, fastest result, zero cost. Run Strategy 1 in parallel for brand building. Launch Strategy 3 in Month 2 once you have a content rhythm

Task 2: USP and Area of Improvement

1. What do you think is the Unique Selling Point (USP) of PolBol?

I think PolBol's main USP is kinda that it doesn't only deliver news, it feels like you can... be involved, like really. People can read quick updates, then vote inside opinion polls and also see what other people are thinking about certain themes. So instead of a typical news website where you just consume , PolBol turns it into something more dialogued and interactive, because users aren't only watching they're participating, and that difference is big.

2. What do you think is one major Area of Improvement for PolBol?

One major area of improvement , in my opinion, would be community engagement after the poll ends. Right now the polls are interesting, yes, but there's not that much happening after someone votes. For example PolBol could actually show the final poll results, with a short explanation, and then maybe lift up a couple of user opinions or summarize why people voted the way they did. Another idea could be sharing follow up content about the outcome from the most popular polls. Also, stronger calls-to-action on Instagram like "vote on the website" could pull more traffic, and keep people returning instead of just checking once.

3. After reviewing PolBol's Instagram page, suggest two content ideas that can help increase engagement, followers, or website traffic.

Idea 1: 60-Second Opinion Reels (but fast)

Make quick reels about trending topics. Start with the first 2-3 seconds giving a simple background, then ask viewers what they think. Instead of only talking, push them to vote on the website. End each reel with a clear line like "Vote now – Link in Bio." This should make people stay a bit longer and also actually click through.

Idea 2: Weekly Poll Highlights (a mini wrap-up)

Once a week post a carousel that recaps the top poll. Show the voting numbers, the final outcome, and maybe 2-3 interesting takeaways from the discussion or comments. The last slide can tease the next poll and invite people to participate right away. That way followers get a reason to come back weekly, not only when they see a new post.

Idea 3: Trendy templates and Interactive posts

After going through the Instagram account, I noticed the post layouts are too boring and unattractive. The posts don't contain any hook-type content from which people may get attracted to. Reels doesn't contain any trendy background music or templates or something that will pull audience. So posting regularly is a must, at the right time, using trendy music, topics, and templates.

Task 4: Execution Report

To promote PolBol, I shared the active poll link with my friends and college classmates through WhatsApp and Instagram. I also posted it in a few WhatsApp groups where people are usually interested in discussing current affairs and trending topics.

The message I shared was simple and engaging:

"Hey! I found this platform called PolBol where you can vote on current affairs and share your opinion. It only takes a minute. Give it a try and cast your vote!"

Along with the message, I shared the PolBol poll page and encouraged everyone to participate. I also referred a few people to PolBol's Instagram page so they could understand what the platform is about before voting.

The response was positive. Several people visited the website, participated in the polls, and shared their opinions. Some of them mentioned that they liked the concept of expressing their views through quick polls and found the platform easy to use. A few also said they would revisit the platform to participate in future polls.

Overall, this activity helped create awareness about PolBol among my peers and encouraged them to engage with the platform.
